VINS IN RETROSPECT

THREE BILLION BIRDS

Three billion is under half the population of humans on this planet, and it's the approximate distance in miles from here to Pluto. Three billion is also the estimated number of individual birds lost in North America since 1970.

A study undertaken by seven scientific institutions and published in Science details the staggering conclusions of 48 years' worth of data: that avian populations in North America are simply crashing. One out of every four birds that existed in 1970, of hundreds of species and from all habitats, no longer exists today.

The researchers did not speculate as to the cause of the decline. Their goal was simply to track the change in population. Our work is now to determine exactly why our ecosystems are less able to support birdlife, and how we can take action to change that.

In keeping with the VINS mission, we plan to incorporate education and action on this topic into every aspect of our work. We see our role as interpreters of the most relevant science for our visitors, empowering them to make the best choices and take the steps necessary to improve the world for birds.

Our plans begin with the development of informational signs detailing the results of the 2019 study, putting its findings in a personal, communal, and continental context, to add to our existing messaging. We wish to put the study in these different perspectives for our visitors, who come to us with diverse backgrounds and levels of knowledge, by displaying data on known threats to local bird species from our Center for Wild Bird Rehabilitation, and linking the health of our native forest habitats to that of more intensely threatened habitats like grasslands.

Our Nature Store plans to stock products to help our visitors take simple actions to help birds thrive. We now carry window deterrents (that do not affect your view) to prevent window strikes by birds. Introduce a child to the world of bird watching with a pair of binoculars and a field guide, and keep an eye out for a recommended list of native plants.

VINS OUTDOOR CLASSROOM IS A REALITY

This structure, funded by the Jane's Trust Foundation, models outdoor learning and supports the educational goals of VINS by demonstrating ways that learning can be taken beyond the four walls of an indoor classroom.

We know that children benefit from spending more time outdoors, especially in natural places. Our goal for the Outdoor Classroom is to increase the quantity, quality and benefits of outdoor experiences for children and adults during their visit to the VINS Nature Center. Taking learning outside is a central component of place-based education, which is an essential aspect of all VINS educational efforts.

Learners of all ages can enjoy the sights, smells and sounds of this living learning environment. Throughout the winter, adult learners in one of VINS' snowshoe events can track the comings and goings of animals in the snow. During the school year, children on a class field trip can escape the confines of a desk and stretch their muscles and brains in an interactive lesson on animal adaptations. On a hot summer's day, visitors to the Nature Center can pause and feel their senses come alive as they listen to the life around them on the forest floor. The quality and appeal of VINS' educational programs derives from authentic learning experiences such as these.

VINS IN RETROSPECT

The Outdoor Classroom, sited in the woods, immerses students in one of the habitats on our beautiful 47-acre campus and allows easy access via our ADA-accessible McKnight Trail to the newest exhibit at the VINS Nature Center, the Forest Canopy Walk. This designated educational space enables VINS to meet the increased demand for field trips and adult learning opportunities by creating an additional space where groups can gather.

CENTER FOR EDUCATION

Our education programs teach about the conservation of our natural world with the assistance of VINS' resident raptors, making an indelible impact on thousands of children and adults from Vermont, New Hampshire and many other places each year.

With the new Outdoor Classroom completed – made possible by Jane's Trust – hundreds of students from across Vermont and New Hampshire will be physically immersed in the natural environment, and the activities in this space will launch them on a journey of discovery on the VINS campus.

All VINS Field Trips incorporate hands-on, place-based education aiming to engage students with the world that surrounds them. With the new immersive Outdoor Classroom, place-based education will become even more real for participating students.

As plans for the Forest Canopy Walk and Outdoor Classroom take shape, we explore how these spaces will allow us to expand our programs – whether it is through additional field trips or Nature Camp opportunities.

CITIZEN SCIENCE AT VINS

In the past two years, VINS has become more involved in a greater diversity of citizen science projects, such as monarch butterfly monitoring and collecting data from VINS' on-site vernal pool. These projects allow for place-based environmental education, while promoting understanding of ourselves as citizens of the wider world.

MonarchWatch aims to track the migration of these rapidly declining but iconic butterflies, who depend on open meadows stocked with milkweed plants for raising their young in summer, stopover sites at nectar-rich plants throughout the United States, and safe, warm wintering grounds in Mexico. By helping our staff members catch and gently tag individual butterflies, our visitors all at once can get up close with wild creatures, collect valuable observations, learn about handling and marking animals the way scientists do, and walk away with excitement and optimism for a small creature on a long journey. Our visitors, along with us, eagerly anticipate the possibility that a volunteer in Mexico might find the very butterfly we tagged in Vermont!

This past spring, VINS also began collecting data on its vernal pool, located near the beginning of the Lingelbach Trail on our Nature Center campus. Run by the Vermont Center for Ecostudies, the Vernal Pool Monitoring Project aims to better understand these ephemeral resources in order to advise land-use management and track amphibian populations. Although our pool does not currently support the sometimes hundreds of individual spotted salamanders, Jefferson salamanders, and wood frogs that can rely on these unique forest features, it is enlightening to understand how the pool changes and grows throughout the season. We look forward to developing more detailed interpretive materials from the data to help visitors understand vernal pools.
